

The Moneychangers

by Jeremy James

Similitudes in the Word of God are not always given the recognition they deserve.

The Bible refers to them by name on only one occasion:

“I have also spoken by the prophets, and I have multiplied visions, and used similitudes, by the ministry of the prophets.” (Hosea 12:10)

This passage tells us that God speaks to us through the prophets by means of prophetic visions and by urging them on occasion to use “similitudes”. A similitude can mean a parable or a figurative description, as many commentators have noted, but it can also mean a message conveyed through a conspicuous public act by the prophet.

The definition used by Jamieson-Fausset-Brown is quaint but precise: “such modes of communication, adapted to man's capacities, as were calculated to arouse attention.”

In our earlier paper, The Children of Chaos Believe their Hour has Come (#288), we referred to a similitude used by the prophet Nehemiah, where he performed a prophetic act or ‘similitude’ which conveyed through mime – in addition to his words – the force of his message:

“Also I shook my lap, and said, So God shake out every man from his house, and from his labour, that performeth not this promise, even thus be he shaken out, and emptied. And all the congregation said, Amen, and praised the LORD.” (Nehemiah 5:13)

We also find similitudes in the Book of Ezekiel where the prophet is instructed by God to perform a number of public actions which are intended to impress upon the Jews the gravity of His message. The prophet is asked, for example, to dig a hole through the wall of his house and furtively sneak out at dusk with his belongings (Chapter 12). This was a prophetic act pointing to the fate of the Jews still living in Jerusalem who will finally realize that their glorious city would fall to the Babylonians and that they should have made their escape while they still had a chance.

There are also a number of similitudes in the New Testament. For example, when Agabus tried to warn of the danger that Paul would face if he went up to Jerusalem, he used his belt to amplify his prophetic words:

“And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.” (Acts 21:11)

The expulsion of the moneychangers

Jesus, too, used a similitude when he drove the moneychangers from the Temple. It may be found in the account of the first expulsion given by John;

“And the Jews' passover was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem, and found in the temple those that sold oxen and sheep and doves, and the changers of money sitting: And when he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables; And said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise.” (John 2:13-16)

If his anger came as a shock to those who knew him, the use of a “scourge” made by his own hands must have surprised them even more.

It would seem at first that the “scourge” was intended as a weapon, but this is hardly the case. The cords were likely made of rushes or reeds strewn on the ground around the area where the sheep and oxen were penned. These may have been used to restrain individual animals or secure makeshift corrals. The “scourge” was probably ineffectual as a weapon and served more as a symbol of our Savior’s authority. By wielding it in the sight of the moneychangers he was showing that he had a mandate to act as he did.

They didn’t oppose him because a great fear had come upon them. This was akin to the fear which God had used in the Old Testament to chasten the nations and keep them from harming Israel.

Intimidated by his anger, by his words, and by the sight of his whip, these hardened traders, who would ordinarily have defended themselves, were driven from the Temple precinct.

These expulsions were significant events, the first at the start of our Savior’s ministry and the second at the end. They revealed to the world that an emissary had been sent by God to purify His Temple. On these occasions, however, Jesus was showing only that he had a divine mandate to act as he did and that the task itself would be performed to perfection at a later date.

The scourge as a prophetic similitude

We can see how the scourge, as a prophetic similitude, points to the sovereign authority of Jesus. It prefigures the real weapon – the Sword of his Word – which he will use when he returns to earth to permanently purge His Father’s Temple of all who defile it. The moneychangers will be annihilated! -

“And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.” – Revelation 19:21

When we see this in prophetic terms, the targets of the Lord's anger in the End Time will be especially despised. This privileged group of people, the "moneychangers" of our modern world, have done more than any other group to overturn the existing order and clear a path for the Antichrist. They even intend to rebuild the Temple in Jerusalem and, under a veneer of Judaic law, institute the worship and exaltation of Baal on the Temple Mount.

We are speaking here of the powerful network of families that own and control the world banking system. As we will shortly demonstrate, their wealth is astronomical, vastly in excess of anything the public has imagined. Collectively, working as a secret consortium from their base in the City of London, they have succeeded in gaining a financial, political, commercial, military and media stranglehold over virtually all nations, including China and Russia.

Through their control of the media, along with a carefully cultivated anonymity, they have gulled the public into believing that their power and influence are constrained by the law of the land, that their wealth, though vast, is commensurate with that of their counterparts in former times, and that, by and large, they are concerned only with maintaining the status quo.

As regular readers of these papers will know, the reality is very different. These modern moneychangers are ruthless and unscrupulous, unbelievably wealthy, and driven by ambitions as insane and dangerous as those of Stalin, Hitler and Ghenghis Khan. The moneychangers in the Temple were "a den of thieves", shamelessly exploiting the honor that belonged to God. Their modern counterparts, however, are far less visible and infinitely more cunning, but they too want what belongs to God. They are working feverishly toward the same goal that motivated Nimrod in ancient Babel, a goal which has continued throughout history to inflame the hearts of his Babylonian descendants. They are determined against all the odds to proclaim their total control over the entire earth and dedicate the whole of mankind to Satan.

A den of thieves without equal in history

Let's take a moment to examine a little of their history, a miscellany of acts so vile that, were they not fully documented, we might not believe them. The magnitude of their thievery is mind-boggling, as is their audacity.

Here is how the Federal Reserve – owned and managed entirely by the modern moneychangers – describes the famous Gold Reserve crisis of 1933:

The United States had been on a de facto gold standard since the 1830s and de jure gold standard since 1900. In 1913 the gold standard was built into the framework of the Federal Reserve. The law required the Federal Reserve to hold gold equal to 40 percent of the value of the currency it issued (technically termed the Federal Reserve Note but colloquially called the dollar) and to convert those dollars into gold at a fixed price of $20.67 per ounce of pure gold.

During the financial crisis of 1933 that culminated in the banking holiday in March 1933, large quantities of gold flowed out from the Federal Reserve. Some of this outflow went to individuals and firms in the United States. This domestic drain occurred because individuals and firms preferred holding metallic gold to bank deposits or paper currency. Some of the gold flowed to foreign nations. This external drain occurred because foreign investors feared a devaluation of the dollar. Together, the internal and external drains consumed the Federal Reserve's free gold. In March 1933, when the Federal Reserve Bank of New York could no longer honor its commitment to convert currency to gold, President Franklin Roosevelt declared a national banking holiday...

In March 1933, the Emergency Banking Act gave the president the power to control international and domestic gold movements. It also gave the secretary of the treasury the power to compel surrender of gold coins and certificates. The administration waited before employing these powers, in hope that the situation would correct itself, but gold outflows continued.

Neither here nor in subsequent paragraphs is any reference made to the infamous Executive Order 6102 which was signed into law by President Roosevelt and issued on 5 April 1933. The following day The New York Times wrote, under the headline Hoarding of Gold:

"The Executive Order issued by the President yesterday amplifies and particularizes his earlier warnings against hoarding. On March 6, taking advantage of a wartime statute that had not been repealed, he issued Presidential Proclamation 2039 [re Executive Order 6102] that forbade the hoarding 'of gold or silver coin or bullion or currency', under penalty of $10,000 fine or ten years' imprisonment or both."

Notice what was happening here. Anyone who held gold as a store of value was deemed guilty of a war crime – akin to trading with the enemy. They were not simply holding it but “hoarding” it and thus acting irresponsibly. Since these people were causing harm to America they were now required to surrender all but 5 ounces of their bullion and gold certificates to the Federal Reserve. They would be compensated at the rate of $20.67 for each ounce of gold surrendered, a price that had not increased since 1877!

Why the public did not trust the Federal Reserve

Firstly, we must ask: Why were so many people holding gold and taking it out of the banking system? The answer is as plain as day. They knew the Federal Reserve was printing money far in excess of the value of the gold that it held in its vaults. By doing this the moneychangers who owned the Fed were making billions of dollars illegally, at no risk to themselves. This criminal racket had been running for several decades and had reached the stage where the Fed had only 6,000 tons of gold to back (at 40 percent) the paper it had issued. It would need to add another 50,000 tons to keep within the law. Unless they did this the Fed itself might collapse.

The moneychangers had a choice: Make up the loss themselves – after all, they had stolen the money. Or use the power of the government to compel the American people to supply the difference. Naturally, the second option was chosen by these predators. The American people, who were trying to protect themselves by storing gold at home, were now required to hand it over or face 10 years in prison! Furthermore, the price they were offered for each ounce surrendered fell far short of its real value.

It should be remembered that all of this occurred at the height of the Depression, when the average family was struggling to survive. (The Depression itself was also manufactured by the moneychangers who, after the Wall Street Crash of 1929, which they had also engineered, the Fed failed to feed additional credit into the economy and keep businesses afloat. They even speeded up the rate of decay by calling in loans before they were due.)

These men in fine suits, many educated at Harvard and Princeton, were ruthless predators, using pernicious lies and devious schemes to make fantastic profits, even though it meant inflicting great hardship on the American people.

The true value of the gold confiscated from the American people

Most estimates of the amount of gold confiscated by the Fed are intended to conceal the sheer extent of the crime. For example, a total of 6,000 tons from individuals and private sources is sometimes cited. However, in their book, Gold Warriors (2005), S&P Seagrave cite credible sources which claim the Fed confiscated 18,000 tons.

This still left the Fed somewhat short of what was needed to stabilize the currency, so the Treasury increased the price of gold by 70 percent! Since the dollar was pegged to gold, this was the same as devaluing the dollar by the same amount.

So the average American was cheated not once but twice. Their gold was stolen and the paper 'compensation' was $20.67 per ounce instead of $35!

To fully appreciate the magnitude of the crime, we must convert 18,000 tons of gold into current (2023) prices and adjust for the increase in population since 1933 – from 125 million to 332. We estimate that, if an equivalent amount of bullion was stolen today, the American people would forfeit a fortune of nearly $3 trillion!

Calculation: 32,150 ozs x 18,000 x $1850 x 332/125 = $2,843,500,320,000

The Word of God warned that nasty tricks of this sort would be played on mankind. The wicked shall do wickedly. False accounting, fraudulent trading, and malicious mispricing have enabled the moneychangers and their kind to steal at their leisure from an unsuspecting public:

“Divers weights are an abomination unto the LORD;
and a false balance is not good.” (Proverbs 20:23)

“Shall I count them pure with the wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights?” (Micah 6:11)

What the moneychangers did in 1933 was an abomination in the eyes of the LORD.

One would have thought that this egregious abuse of trust would have exposed the moneychangers and led to their eviction, but this did not happen because the American people were told only part of the story. The media convinced them that the currency was in crisis and urgent action was required: “Our good friends at the Fed did what they had to do.”

The great Russian theft of 1998

The same cabal are running the Fed today and, as we have shown in previous papers, are planning to expropriate from the American people a sum far in excess of the amount stolen in 1933. As we stated in #219, the Elite like to test out their plans on a small scale before employing them more widely. The coming transfer of wealth, which will affect every nation on earth, has already been successfully tested in Russia.

After the “fall” of the USSR in 1991, the ruble came under pressure. Its value fluctuated on foreign currency markets. The propaganda ran for several years before the alleged ‘crisis’ finally struck in August 1998. Somehow the Russian leadership – with the assistance of the media (of course) – convinced the Russian people that the currency had actually collapsed and that the ruble was now worthless, even within Russia itself.

Among the few business people to realize what was going on was Russia’s top oligarch Roman Abramovich, who in an inspired deal bought control of the PAZ bus plant in 1999, by simply buying up its shares on the open market — the first significant takeover that was not a private equity deal.

From an op-ed in The Moscow Times, 22 August, 2018

Incredibly, despite their long experience of state-sponsored lies and propaganda, the Russian public failed to see that their currency could not possibly lose its value within Russia itself. It was only necessary for the national banking system to honor the currency and it could continue in circulation. Savings would remain intact. But the banks, on orders from the Kremlin, simply withdrew the currency and destroyed the most important store of wealth. Many were made destitute. Starvation was rife in towns and cities across Russia. Some were hit so hard that they turned to alcohol and drank themselves to death. Life expectancy fell by several years. Millions were forced to survive through barter and exchange, and by growing vegetables on small allotments.

The Oligarchs move in

The Russian elite then took the opportunity to privatise the natural resources of Russia across its entire territory – oil, gas, timber, and minerals. Every Russian citizen was entitled to a few shares in this massive exercise, thereby making it ‘legal’. Alas, most of the population were too poor to hold onto them.

In this way a small group of men, the famous ‘Oligarchs’, bought up most of the shares and became immensely rich in the process. They now owned the natural resources of the largest country on earth.

How can a country with vast natural resources and no foreign debt go broke? How can its currency collapse? It is impossible. But if the national media peddles a deadly lie and the nation’s leaders recoil in horror at this alleged ‘calamity’, the people believe it.

Something similar is coming to the rest of the world. The wealth of nations, including their infrastructure and natural resources, will be confiscated by the banking system to “pay off” aggregate national, corporate, and personal debt. Since mortgages on a huge swathe of private property will be in default, the banks will end up owning most of the residential housing, as well as the plant, equipment, inventory, and premises of many small and medium-size businesses.

Bank for International Settlements head Agustín Carstens about CBDC and control

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=rpNnTuK5JJU>

Agustín Carstens, head of the BIS

Sometime in late 2020 the head of the BIS (Bank for International Settlements) said the proposed digital currency, which all countries will be required to adopt, will give "absolute control" to the Central Banks, both legally and technologically. They will know exactly how much money each person on earth will have, as well as details of every item of personal expenditure. The CBDC (Central Bank Digital Currency) will not have the permanency of hard cash, but can be withdrawn, in whole or in part, at any time by the state (i.e. the moneychangers). The state will also be able to prescribe the kinds of items and services one may purchase, and set a time limit or expiry date on one's 'cash' balance. Either you spend it or you lose it, and you will only be able to spend it on the items you are permitted to buy.

Incredibly, in an article dated 9 February 2023, Carstens actually had the gall to say that the mandate of central banks is "to safeguard the value of the money they issue so that people can make financial decisions with confidence."

These liars have no shame.

National currencies will be abolished or phased out. The replacement currency, when it comes, will be electronic – see #307. Individual nations will be allowed to participate in the new international banking system only if they adopt the One World currency (the CBDC or ‘Central Bank Digital Currency’). This will enable total electronic surveillance across society, where every purchase, however small, will be centrally recorded and behavior inconsistent with government ‘guidelines’ identified.

The Elite will likely take the opportunity at this time to implement the Chinese social credit system on a worldwide basis. Complete totalitarian control of the entire earth will have been achieved in just a few years, with all power concentrated in the hands of a relatively small cabal of moneychangers.

“Woe to them that devise iniquity, and work evil upon their beds! when the morning is light, they practise it, because it is in the power of their hand. And they covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away: so they oppress a man and his house, even a man and his heritage.” (Micah 2:1-2)

The poisoning of China in the 19th century

The crimes committed by the City of London – which co-ordinates the worldwide network of moneychangers – are simply vast. Of the many we could choose from, we will confine our attention to its exploitation and eventual destruction of China and the installation, in due course, of a ruthless communist regime.

Around the start of the 19th century, China was a prosperous and reasonably well governed nation. It had no expansionist ambitions and was content, by and large, to increase its trade with the rest of the world. Through its East India Company [EIC], the British appeared initially to be interested only in importing Chinese silk, porcelain and tea, for which there was a high domestic demand. By establishing bases in various Chinese ports, they gradually lured the Chinese into depending more and more on British ships to carry their goods to the rest of the world. The moneychangers who owned the EIC made huge profits from this trade. However, the Chinese had long used silver as their currency and the steady importation of Chinese goods into Britain itself was draining the British supply of silver.

The EIC got around this problem by employing one of the most cunning and destructive tricks ever attempted by any nation in peacetime. They used the cheap labor and vast stretches of arable land in India, which they had conquered a few decades earlier, to grow opium. They then shipped this, both directly and via intermediaries, to China, initially at a price that quickly attracted large numbers of customers. Some of the most capable and educated among the Chinese became hooked on the drug. Opium dens opened in all the major cities to accommodate the ever-increasing number of Chinese who had now become opium addicts. The British were easily able to boost supply to meet demand, and when the Chinese authorities banned the importation of the drug, the EIC arranged with smugglers and third parties to ship it on their behalf. The amount of silver that flowed from China to Britain through the sale of opium was prodigious, to the point where opium became the most traded commodity on earth. It was also incredibly profitable since the EIC was effectively employing slave labor in India to grow the opium.

Opium dealer in China around 1900.

The widespread opium addiction in China, especially among the merchants and professional class, brought another boon to the British. The EIC was quick to exploit this creeping social decay to establish an effective monopoly on a large proportion of the Chinese goods exported to the rest of the world. The profits from this, too, were immense.

A threefold profit

In a letter to Queen Victoria in 1839, the Chinese Commissioner Lin Zexu said:

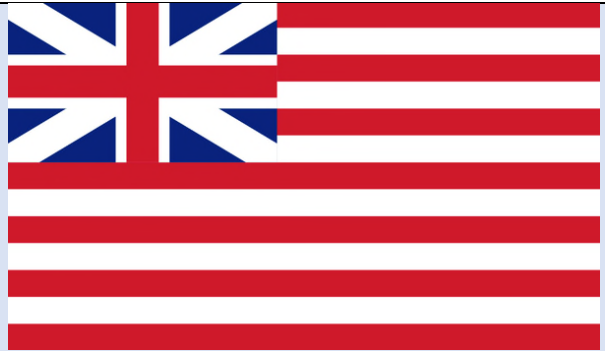

“Your honorable nation takes away the products of our central land [i.e. China itself], and not only do you thereby obtain food and support for yourselves but moreover, by re-selling these products to other countries, you reap a threefold profit.”

Shocked by the great harm which this criminal British enterprise was inflicting on their country, both economically and socially, the Chinese rulers ordered the destruction of a major consignment of British opium. Even though all such trade was illegal and the Chinese were fully entitled to take such action, the British government treated this as an act of war and sent soldiers and gunboats to China to demand reparations. Known to history as the 'First Opium War, 1839-1842' it was really a series of one-sided military engagements where the British army and navy, with greatly superior equipment and weaponry, quashed Chinese resistance.

Complete humiliation

The outcome for the Chinese was a complete humiliation. They were forced to make astonishing concessions to the British. A productive, self-sufficient nation was taken apart by the moneychangers, its wealth stolen, its population poisoned and oppressed, its enterprises exploited, and its markets opened to cheap foreign imports. The EIC even got the Chinese to hand over Hong Kong! (which they retained until 1997). The British also secured extraterritorial control over four other ports, where they could do as they liked beyond the reach of Chinese law.

The Grand Union flag of 1775 – considered the first American flag.	Flag of the East India Company at the time of the American Revolution.
The remarkable similarity between the two flags reveals their common origin. The moneychangers were controlling both sides of the world.

The process of exploitation and decay continued into the 20th century, resulting in an epic civil war and interminable anarchy. The Communists, trained and abetted by the Anglo-American Axis, took complete control of the country in 1949 and proceeded to butcher all opposition. Once again, a sadistic political movement, created and controlled by the moneychangers, was used to bring down a major world power.

“Deliver me, O LORD, from the evil man;
preserve me from the violent man;
which imagine mischiefs in their heart;
continually are they gathered together for war.”
– Psalm 140:1-2

The start of the Central Bank System

The moneychangers came together in 1694 to found the Bank of England. This was the world's first central bank, a clever enterprise designed to secure a private monopoly over the issuance of money. As a nation's economy grew and wealth was created, additional money was needed to support the increase in economic activity. The money supply was expanded by making more credit available in the form of loans on which interest was charged. The banks invariably loaned far more money than they held on deposit because their customers in the main would consistently withdraw only so much from their accounts on a regular basis. The whole system would crash if all depositors were to ask for the return of their money at the same time. Individual banks avoid this eventuality – known as a “run” on the bank – by loaning to each other on a daily basis and turning, as required, to the ‘lender of last resort’, the Central Bank, only when unusually large sums are required.

The headquarters of the Bank of England in London has two imposing bronze doors at its main entrance. Each bears the caduceus, the staff of the 'god' Mercury. The Serpent wants the world to know that the Bank belongs to him!

This system, which has since spread to every country on earth (other than Iran and N Korea, apparently), is based on a number of cunning lies or ‘misconceptions’. It is important to understand them because the Satanic plan to enslave mankind has used them with great success (a) to accumulate financial wealth on a colossal scale and (b) to use that wealth to secure control over virtually all of the institutions which we thought were created for our protection:

Lie #1. The Central Bank is owned by the state on behalf of the people.

No, it's not. All central banks are owned by a private consortium of ultra-rich families, usually operating at arm's length via a series of financial intermediaries. By turning the state itself into a borrower, especially in times of war, the central bank system can generate colossal profits by providing emergency credit to the government. From the bankers' standpoint, the best loan is one that is never repaid but merely 'serviced', where the borrower is trapped in a never-ending cycle of interest payments. Usury is the mallet that the bankers use to crush nations. The power to set and raise interest rates is equivalent to that of an army whose infantry are invisible.

Lie #2. The government controls the Central Bank.

The government pretends to "control" the Central Bank by appointing its governor and giving the impression that it is constrained in some way by parliamentary oversight. The politicians and the journalists work together to maintain the illusion that the bank, as an institution, differs little from a government department and that it busies itself altruistically with matters that are too dull and boring to discuss.

	✓ William Paterson, a founder of the Bank, by Charles Wheeler The motto 'Sic Vos Non Vobis' is associated with Paterson and now more generally with public service. Its loose translation is 'Thus you labour, but not for yourselves' and epitomises the philosophy of a central bank.
From a Bank of England publication, Inside the Bank of England
The Bank of England explains its official motto in one of its publications: "Thus you [the people] labour, but not for yourselves." Yes indeed, it does epitomise the philosophy of a central bank!

Lie #3. The central bank is a non-profit corporation.

This is false. The central bank works hand-in-hand with the commercial banks to help them maximize their profits. A central bank can also post a profit to its own account but its primary function is to keep the fractional-reserve banking system in operation.

Lie #4. The central bank exists to serve the public good.

This is an ambivalent proposition. To the extent that it facilitates financial activity within an economy, it serves a useful purpose. However it does so in such a way that a large proportion of the wealth generated within the economy is retained by the banking system and appropriated by its owners.

Lie #5. The central bank is economically neutral.

Through its ability to set interest rates and to determine the precise terms and conditions under which credit will be made available to customers, the bank exercises an enormous influence over economic activity. It is definitely not neutral. The money supply can be regulated (or manipulated) by raising and lowering interest rates in accordance with relevant market criteria and other factors which are known to affect the productive capacity of the economy. The wrong choice of interest rate or lending criteria for various sectors can seriously harm an economy. We all know how dangerous inflation can be! If lenders default on their loans in a serious downturn or a recession, the bank can seize the loan collateral. When that happens the commercial banks gain in two ways, by retaining all loan repayments made to date and by securing ownership of a valuable asset. (In theory, if you are a dime short on your final mortgage repayment, they can seize your home.)

The loser, every time, is the private citizen.

Lie #6. The central bank maintains economic stability.

Financial ‘experts’ argue that central banks maintain economic stability, but this is nonsense. History has shown over and over that economic cycles – known as boom and bust cycles – are produced by the banking system. These come about, supposedly, through poor decision-making. These “poor decisions” in turn produce a wave of loan defaults and thus a very profitable outcome for the commercial banks.

Banks seldom if ever lose money because every loan is made against an asset of greater value. The customer always comes off badly. The loan repayments on the car always exceed the cost of the car by a considerable amount. All of that profit goes to the bank. On the other hand, if the customer defaults, the bank retains all of the repayments made to date and then repossesses the car. As apex predators, the banks have every incentive to continue producing boom and bust cycles.

Lie #7. All loans made by the bank come from savings on deposit.

This is a common misconception. The banks operate what is known as a “fractional reserve” system. This allows them to loan 7-10 times the amount on deposit with them. The Central Bank sets the reserve ratio and thereby enables the banks, if they so choose, to loan much more money than is economically justifiable.

This system is confusing to many members of the public because they imagine the bank must have the cash on hand in order to make the loan and that this can only come from money placed on deposit with them. In practice the bank “pretends” to have the money and simply increases the balance in the borrower’s account by the amount of the loan. This is how banks “create” money and expand the money supply.

It also means that THEY are the initial beneficiaries of all the money they create. Please take careful note of this: The banks own the money they loan to their customers.

In the first half of the 20th century, and even earlier, many banks printed their own money [See examples on this page]. This practice was phased out after the Second World War because it prompted the public to ask a very obvious question: How can a private bank create money?

Today the increase in the amount of printed money in circulation (i.e. notes and coins) is overseen by the Central Bank. This helps to reinforce the illusion in the public mind that the banking system is neutral and any addition to the supply of money in circulation has been authorised by the Treasury or the Department of Finance. In reality it is controlled entirely by the cabal of families which own the banking system.

These families own every dollar they create (at no cost to themselves); they then loan it to a customer – or a sovereign nation! – who must pay it all back with interest.

This sounds absurd, doesn't it? And yet this is how the system works. Sic Vos Non Vobis! – “Thus you labour, but not for yourselves.”

If this is so, then the families concerned must be staggeringly wealthy. And they are! [We'll look at the figures in a moment.]

This should prompt us to ask how these people managed to acquire such a privileged position. If we ask this question and pursue it diligently, we will arrive at a fact of supreme importance. Every member of this insidious cabal is a follower of the same religion – they all worship Satan and have done so for millennia.

Let's see why this is so.

One hundred percent

A good account of their religious affiliation and the way the moneychangers operate was given by a financial manager who worked closely with them for five years. While the moneychangers are an exclusive cabal, they regularly employ people who have little or no conscience, men of ability who have no qualms about breaking the law. At that time, the Dutchman, Ronald Bernard, was such a person. When a business contact in the banking system saw how good he was at playing the currency market, he offered him his 'seat' in the banking system in return for 10 percent of his profits.

Bernard was glad to take up the offer since it would give him access to the highest levels of international finance and provide him with lucrative business connections. However, the man who offered him his 'seat' warned that he would survive and thrive only if he completely set aside his conscience – 100 percent! Bernard had no problem with this. He had been brought up to regard the world with a cold eye and to take advantage of others as much as he could.

As it turned out much of his work involved laundering huge sums of money for various criminal cartels. These included the proceeds of drug deals, the sale of illegal commodities, the provision of funding to terrorist organizations, international arms trading, and even people trafficking. By his own account he was very successful at this and made substantial profits.

Before long he was being invited by senior colleagues and clients to attend exclusive parties. Patrons took drugs, cavorted with naked women, and worshipped Satan. Initially he viewed all of this with amusement. The moral depravity of what he saw did not affect his conscience in any way:

“These people, most of them, were Luciferians. And you can say “religion is a fairy tale, God doesn't exist, none of that is real.” Well, for these people, it is truth and reality. They served something immaterial, which they called Lucifer. I was also in contact with those circles, but I laughed at it because to me they were just clients. So I went to places called Churches of Satan.”

However, everything changed when he was told that, at the next party, participants would sacrifice a child. Whatever conscience he still had rebelled at this prospect. He refused to attend and turned down later invitations. Gradually he started to realize that these people were Satanists in the real sense. Some had been inducted into this ancient religion through their business contacts, while others had been raised by generational worshippers of Lucifer.

He was deeply troubled and tried to hide the extent of his distress. He knew his employers would not be pleased with his failure to honor Satan through ritual child sacrifice. Before long he had a complete breakdown and had to be hospitalized.

After he cut his ties with the Luciferians, Ronald Bernard set about forming a cooperative fairtrade pro-life bank which would not charge interest. Its website includes the following profile of Mr Bernard:

Ronald (1962) is a socially responsible entrepreneur. His background is in economy, psychology, architecture and theology. He worked independent for 30 years in diverse branches. In the financial sector it was for asset management, currency- and deposit trade. He is well known in several EU countries and stands for a 'Good Stewardship of All Life'. He initiated the creation of B of Joy. A interest-free cooperative fairtrade pro-life bank UC. As a result, from society itself, a quiet cooperative (r)evolution is progressing.

He later explained his awakening as follows: “Let’s put it this way, I was [in] training to become a psychopath, and I failed. I did not complete the training and didn’t become a psychopath. My conscience came back...”

Normally someone like him would be eliminated. He believes he only avoided assassination because he never named names. During his public revelations in 2017, which received no coverage whatever in the mainstream media, he confined his disclosures to the system per se. No institutions were named:

“You get so deep into these circles, and you sign a lifetime contract – not with blood or anything – to never disclose names of companies, organizations or people. I think that is why I am still alive.”

According to his account, all of the top people in the banking world, the ones who make the really big money, are Satanists. A lot of those who are close to them are Satanists also, but they don't have a complete overview. The whole financial system has been compartmentalized to ensure that the total number who know what's really happening is kept as small as possible.

He summarized the conflicted, upside-down condition of the real world as follows:

“Everybody thinks there are opposites like good and bad guys in the world, but on the higher levels it is just a game and they are all working together. However, they do have to stick to the rules and regulations, which they themselves have created to keep the rest of society suppressed and make sure that it will not be too crowded at the top.”

“...one of the things that I found out that I did not know before, but now I do, is about secret services. You think they are there to serve and protect a people, country, etc. but they actually turn out to be criminal organizations ... the system is heavily so. We are talking about financing wars, creating wars, so basically creating a lot of misery in this world... lots of conflict.”

“...the entire world, as we think we know it, is just an illusion that we believe in – which is something you find out in this line of work [i.e. international finance].”

“For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved.”

– John 3:20

Perhaps his most important observation, and certainly one that we all need to fully understand in these troubled times, relates to the sheer wickedness of those who serve Satan. Referring to those who hate the Light, he said:

“...there really has been a moment of separation from the manifestation of Light, in which a group went their own way and are carrying an intense hatred, anger. The people who do not underestimate the severity of this are few... this is an all-annihilating force that hates our guts. It hates creation, it hates life. It will do anything to destroy us completely, and the way to do that is to divide humanity.”

CONCLUSION

As we reflect on the power exercised by this wicked system, it will help to remind ourselves that this man saw it all from the inside, that he fell headlong into a deadly trap that has devoured millions, and yet he managed to return, as it were, and tell us what he saw. Against all the odds, he was able to give a convincing account of those among us who live in total darkness. He wants us to understand that the hatred they bear for mankind is intense and that they are working together, in league with Satan, “to destroy us completely.”

Jesus gave us the same warning when he said

“Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it.”

(John 8:44)

If these men were isolated and impoverished, having little influence in the world, we might safely ignore them, but they are incredibly wealthy and firmly entrenched at the highest levels of our most prestigious corporations and institutions. And they are there because Satan, the prince of this world, has put them there.

In a valiant attempt to estimate the total wealth that these people possess, L Romanoff made a highly conservative estimate of each component of their wealth, based on documented sources only, and arrived at a ballpark figure of $325 trillion. Like him, we suspect the real figure is much greater. [<https://www.unz.com/lromanoff/the-richest-man-in-the-world/>]

If we trust these people to serve us, we are deceived. They are working with the Adversary to prepare a path for the Antichrist. We have covered this in detail in our previous papers. Our aim here is to impress upon the reader the unimaginable wealth that these wicked men possess. The modern moneychangers are using this to enslave mankind, to surround the sheep in a net so fine that they walk straight into it. Only then will the great culling commence.

Many events in the life of Elisha foreshadowed the earthly mission of Jesus. When Elisha met Hazael in Damascus and gave him a message from the LORD, the prophet wept because he could see the incredible slaughter that this man, the next king of Syria, would inflict on Israel [2 Kings 8:11-12]. Jesus, too, showed great emotion when he addressed the moneychangers and the Pharisees. Like Elisha, he could see what these men would do in the End Time. While expressing his anger he showed them a sign, a prophetic foretaste of what he would inflict on them when he returned. His little scourge of reeds conveyed a terrible message.
